
Being polite when he gives you an STD

Posted by dailyherald - 2007/11/07 00:06

DEAR MISS MANNERS -- To my chagrin, I learned that the erstwhile object of my affections has given me a lovely memento, also known as a social disease. Additional tests are pending to ensure that there is no true cause for alarm. It is an unwelcome but extremely effective cure for a broken heart.

What is the proper way to alert him to this fact, as he will also need treatment? Must I do this in person? He is abroad for another week.

Read more...

=====

Re: Being polite when he gives you an STD

Posted by mom - 2007/11/07 07:59

Sorry miss manners but she gave up the title of Lady when she slept with the man without marrying him and without using a condom. Not too bright

=====

Re: Being polite when he gives you an STD

Posted by kiddviciousss - 2007/11/07 10:23

mom wrote:

Sorry miss manners but she gave up the title of Lady when she slept with the man without marrying him and without using a condom. Not too bright

Sorry, mom, but from the context we don't know if the man is her erstwhile husband. There are plenty of married, Mormon moms out there whose husbands brought home something a little extra after work. Do you use a condom?

=====

Re: Being polite when he gives you an STD

Posted by Pittakos - 2007/11/07 14:02

The problem with condoms is that they just aren't big enough.

=====