
Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Pittakos - 2008/05/08 11:39

This thread discusses:

Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

In North Carolina, bigamy is a Class 1 felony, punishable by four to 10 months in prison.

What a bone-head! Marrying two women will get you jail time. Being married to one and sleeping with the other will get you just that and nothing more.

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by leftintheuc - 2008/05/08 12:31

Pittakos wrote:

This thread discusses:

Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

In North Carolina, bigamy is a Class 1 felony, punishable by four to 10 months in prison.

What a bone-head! Marrying two women will get you jail time. Being married to one and sleeping with the other will get you just that and nothing more.

Good advice! I'll take it!

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Betz - 2008/05/08 12:41

leftintheuc wrote:

Pittakos wrote:

This thread discusses:

Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

In North Carolina, bigamy is a Class 1 felony, punishable by four to 10 months in prison.

What a bone-head! Marrying two women will get you jail time. Being married to one and sleeping with the other will get you just that and nothing more.

Good advice! I'll take it!

Oh, I don't know . . . I've described to my hubby, in vivid detail, exactly which body part a meat cleaver would be used on in a situation as described by Pittakos. ;) :laugh:

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by iceman - 2008/05/08 14:33

Pittakos wrote:

This thread discusses:

Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

In North Carolina, bigamy is a Class 1 felony, punishable by four to 10 months in prison.

What a bone-head! Marrying two women will get you jail time. Being married to one and sleeping with the other will get you just that and nothing more.

Let's see...two women...jail time, could be a welcome reprieve.
And another thing, I can barely keep up with one 'honey-do' list...let alone a second. Which list gets the priority?

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Wren - 2008/05/08 15:55

Betz, you wrote: "Oh, I don't know . . . I've described to my hubby, in vivid detail, exactly which body part a meat cleaver would be used on in a situation as described by Pittakos."

I know that you think it is funny, but, in fact, it is sexist, unwarranted, unwelcome, and uninvited. Please don't joke about terroristic threats.

If your man is stupid enough to do that to a super wife, then walk away from him instead of doing something that destroys your life.

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Betz - 2008/05/08 17:24

Wren wrote:

Betz, you wrote: "Oh, I don't know . . . I've described to my hubby, in vivid detail, exactly which body part a meat cleaver would be used on in a situation as described by Pittakos."

I know that you think it is funny, but, in fact, it is sexist, unwarranted, unwelcome, and uninvited. Please don't joke about terroristic threats.

If your man is stupid enough to do that to a super wife, then walk away from him instead of doing something that destroys your life.

I agree, it is sexist, unwarranted, unwelcome and uninvited. That's why we joke about it. I know he would never do anything like that, and he knows that I would never take a meat cleaver to him. Mainly, because we don't have a meat cleaver. :laugh:

Now, if I made the above statement while brandishing a meat cleaver, that would be a different story.

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Sir John the Apostate - 2008/05/08 17:34

Pittakos wrote:

This thread discusses:

Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

In North Carolina, bigamy is a Class 1 felony, punishable by four to 10 months in prison.

What a bone-head! Marrying two women will get you jail time. Being married to one and sleeping with the other will get you just that and nothing more.

Oh yeah tell that to the guy who's wife cut off his unit.:woohoo:

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Wren - 2008/05/08 17:57

Just the talk of meat cleavers and "units" makes me nervous in the service. I am always unfailingly polite and considerate of my better half. Of course that doesn't mean that I always do what she wants, but, most of the time, if it makes her happy, it makes me happy.

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Sir John the Apostate - 2008/05/08 18:44

Wren wrote:

Just the talk of meat cleavers and "units" makes me nervous in the service. I am always unfailingly polite and considerate of my better half. Of course that doesn't mean that I always do what she wants, but, most of the time, if it makes her happy, it makes me happy.

Ah your a wise man!!! http://www.heraldextra.com/images/fbfiles/images/Green_gobber-6108e8880c262aab01056de4730a7899.gif

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Jaye - 2008/05/08 19:32

iceman wrote:

Pittakos wrote:

This thread discusses:

Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

In North Carolina, bigamy is a Class 1 felony, punishable by four to 10 months in prison.

What a bone-head! Marrying two women will get you jail time. Being married to one and sleeping with the other will get you just that and nothing more.

Let's see...two women...jail time, could be a welcome reprieve.

And another thing, I can barely keep up with one 'honey-do' list...let alone a second. Which list gets the priority?

Not to mention dealing with two separate cases of PMS.:woohoo: :blink:

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Jaye - 2008/05/08 19:36

Sir John the Apostate wrote:

Pittakos wrote:

This thread discusses:

Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

In North Carolina, bigamy is a Class 1 felony, punishable by four to 10 months in prison.

What a bone-head! Marrying two women will get you jail time. Being married to one and sleeping with the other will get you just that and nothing more.

Oh yeah tell that to the guy who's wife cut off his unit.:woohoo:

Ahhhh...yes...the Bobbitt procedure.

But that wasn't strictly about marital infidelity. It was also about serial abuse and enforced sexual intercourse by her husband.

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Girl Raised in the South - 2008/05/08 19:44

I'm glad you brought up Lorena Bobbitt, Jaye. A long time ago, I helped one of my children write a limerick for school about this woman. (We got an "A".)

There once a girl named Loren-a
Who went temporarily insane-a.
She'd had enough strife
So she got a sharp knife,
And her revenge, she did gain-a!

Thank you. . .you may hold your applause.

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Sir John the Apostate - 2008/05/09 11:07

Jaye wrote:

Sir John the Apostate wrote:

Pittakos wrote:

This thread discusses:

Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

In North Carolina, bigamy is a Class 1 felony, punishable by four to 10 months in prison.

What a bone-head! Marrying two women will get you jail time. Being married to one and sleeping with the other will get you just that and nothing more.

Oh yeah tell that to the guy who's wife cut off his unit.:woohoo:

Ahhhh...yes...the Bobbitt procedure.

But that wasn't strictly about marital infidelity. It was also about serial abuse and enforced sexual intercourse by her husband.

She wasn't the first. When my father was stationed in Japan a woman on base performed the same procedure on her errant husband!

Risky business! :woohoo:

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Jaye - 2008/05/10 10:33

Here's another one.

Anchorage woman cut off boyfriend's penis, police say

ASSAULT: Wastewater worker retrieves organ from toilet; police rush it to surgeons who reattach it.

By ANNE AURAND
Anchorage Daily News

Published: February 21, 2005

Last Modified: February 22, 2005 at 04:16 AM

Surgeons reattached an Anchorage man's penis over the weekend after his girlfriend, apparently upset over a pending breakup, cut it off with a kitchen knife, Anchorage police said Sunday.

A city wastewater utility worker recovered the penis from a toilet down which the woman had flushed it. It was rushed to Providence Alaska Medical Center, where doctors performed reattachment surgery early Sunday morning, according to police reports.

Police said the knife attack occurred during an argument involving the 44-year-old man wanting out of the relationship. The woman drove the man to the hospital after the attack.

Police arrested Kim Tran, 35, Sunday morning at the bloodied home where the attack occurred. She was arraigned Sunday afternoon on charges of domestic violence assault and tampering with evidence and remains in jail with no bail set.

Neither drugs nor alcohol was involved in the attack, but it did involve a triangle of relationships, according to police spokeswoman Anita Shell.

The man, whom police would not identify, was married to Tran's aunt, Shell said. All three had lived together for a while, during which time Tran and the man had a relationship for at least a year, Shell said. The man moved out of the home on Moose Run Circle sometime recently, but Tran and the aunt still live together, she said.

"The aunt was aware of the relationship, and it was causing problems," Shell said. She would not release the aunt's name. Police don't know where the aunt was when the assault occurred, she said.

The man wanted to break up with Tran, but the woman resisted that idea, Shell said. The two were arguing about the issue sometime before midnight Saturday, but at some point they decided to have sex.

After he allowed Tran to tie his arms to the window handle above the bed, she pulled the kitchen knife and severed his penis, Shell said. The man's testicles remained attached, she said.

Tran flushed the penis down the toilet, untied the man and drove him to the hospital, according to police reports. She parked in a no-parking zone while she walked into the emergency room with the victim, who was conscious and able to walk, but shaking and in shock, Shell said.

After finding a nurse, Tran said she was leaving to move her car but drove home instead, Shell said.

Police rushed to the home and found her cleaning up the bloody scene. A trail of blood stretched through the house, Shell said.

Police got the details about what had happened to the penis. They summoned the Anchorage Water and Wastewater Utility to see if it could be recovered.

"AWWU pulled the toilet from the base, tipped it into the tub and it fell out," Shell said. The penis had been lodged in the "S" curve of the toilet for more than two hours. Officials put it on ice and drove it to the emergency room.

The AWWU worker who was summoned to the scene declined to be interviewed Sunday. AWWU general manager Mark Premo said utility staff work around the clock to be available for emergencies.

Around 6 a.m., about six hours after the knife attack, hospital officials said the surgery was successful, according to police reports. A hospital spokeswoman would not discuss anything about the case or the patient Sunday.

Shell said she's never heard of such a case here. In fact, she doesn't know of it ever happening except for the famous Lorena Bobbitt case in 1993 in Virginia.

Bobbitt cut off her abusive husband's penis, then drove away and flung it out her car window. The penis was located and reattached. But Bobbitt claimed she had been raped and abused, and Shell said physical abuse did not appear to be a part of the Anchorage case.

"This was, if anything, more of a mental anguish," Shell said.

The surgery used to reattach a penis is the same kind of surgery used to reattach a severed finger but far less common, said Dr. Sarah Troxel, a local plastic surgeon.

The procedure is called micro-vascular surgery, and it requires reattaching blood vessels, the urethra and other parts under a microscope. She went through training for microsurgery at Stanford.

With fingers, "if the blood vessels take, and the finger doesn't die ... with a good surgeon and a clean cut, it's not unusual that they survive."

But in the case of penises, she said, the function of the urethra after the surgery could be a problem.

"I'd say it's more likely that it might not work very well," she said.

Daily News reporter Anne Aurand can be reached at aaurand@adn.com or 257-4591.

Comments

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Sir John the Apostate - 2008/05/10 14:59

Jaye wrote:

Here's another one.

Anchorage woman cut off boyfriend's penis, police say

ASSAULT: Wastewater worker retrieves organ from toilet; police rush it to surgeons who reattach it.

By ANNE AURAND
Anchorage Daily News

Published: February 21, 2005

Last Modified: February 22, 2005 at 04:16 AM

Surgeons reattached an Anchorage man's penis over the weekend after his girlfriend, apparently upset over a pending breakup, cut it off with a kitchen knife, Anchorage police said Sunday.

A city wastewater utility worker recovered the penis from a toilet down which the woman had flushed it. It was rushed to Providence Alaska Medical Center, where doctors performed reattachment surgery early Sunday morning, according to police reports.

Police said the knife attack occurred during an argument involving the 44-year-old man wanting out of the relationship. The woman drove the man to the hospital after the attack.

Police arrested Kim Tran, 35, Sunday morning at the bloodied home where the attack occurred. She was arraigned Sunday afternoon on charges of domestic violence assault and tampering with evidence and remains in jail with no bail set.

Neither drugs nor alcohol was involved in the attack, but it did involve a triangle of relationships, according to police spokeswoman Anita Shell.

The man, whom police would not identify, was married to Tran's aunt, Shell said. All three had lived together for a while, during which time Tran and the man had a relationship for at least a year, Shell said. The man moved out of the home on Moose Run Circle sometime recently, but Tran and the aunt still live together, she said.

"The aunt was aware of the relationship, and it was causing problems," Shell said. She would not release the aunt's name. Police don't know where the aunt was when the assault occurred, she said.

The man wanted to break up with Tran, but the woman resisted that idea, Shell said. The two were arguing about the issue sometime before midnight Saturday, but at some point they decided to have sex.

After he allowed Tran to tie his arms to the window handle above the bed, she pulled the kitchen knife and severed his penis, Shell said. The man's testicles remained attached, she said.

Tran flushed the penis down the toilet, untied the man and drove him to the hospital, according to police reports. She parked in a no-parking zone while she walked into the emergency room with the victim, who was conscious and able to walk, but shaking and in shock, Shell said.

After finding a nurse, Tran said she was leaving to move her car but drove home instead, Shell said.

Police rushed to the home and found her cleaning up the bloody scene. A trail of blood stretched through the house, Shell said.

Police got the details about what had happened to the penis. They summoned the Anchorage Water and Wastewater Utility to see if it could be recovered.

"AWWU pulled the toilet from the base, tipped it into the tub and it fell out," Shell said. The penis had been lodged in the "S" curve of the toilet for more than two hours. Officials put it on ice and drove it to the emergency room.

The AWWU worker who was summoned to the scene declined to be interviewed Sunday. AWWU general manager Mark Premo said utility staff work around the clock to be available for emergencies.

Around 6 a.m., about six hours after the knife attack, hospital officials said the surgery was successful, according to police reports. A hospital spokeswoman would not discuss anything about the case or the patient Sunday.

Shell said she's never heard of such a case here. In fact, she doesn't know of it ever happening except for the famous Lorena Bobbitt case in 1993 in Virginia.

Bobbitt cut off her abusive husband's penis, then drove away and flung it out her car window. The penis was located and reattached. But Bobbitt claimed she had been raped and abused, and Shell said physical abuse did not appear to be a part of the Anchorage case.

"This was, if anything, more of a mental anguish," Shell said.

The surgery used to reattach a penis is the same kind of surgery used to reattach a severed finger but far less common, said Dr. Sarah Troxel, a local plastic surgeon.

The procedure is called micro-vascular surgery, and it requires reattaching blood vessels, the urethra and other parts under a microscope. She went through training for microsurgery at Stanford.

With fingers, "if the blood vessels take, and the finger doesn't die ... with a good surgeon and a clean cut, it's not unusual that they survive."

But in the case of penises, she said, the function of the urethra after the surgery could be a problem.

"I'd say it's more likely that it might not work very well," she said.

Daily News reporter Anne Aurand can be reached at aurand@adn.com or 257-4591.

Comments

Like I said risky business.:blush:

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by ericmiami - 2008/05/10 17:24

Are we permitted to submit our own last line?

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by ericmiami - 2008/05/10 17:26

To the limerick, I meant.

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Jaye - 2008/05/10 21:50

Go for it Eric.:P

=====

Re:Two wives get smart, snare shared hubby

Posted by Girl Raised in the South - 2008/05/11 14:59

ericmiami wrote:
To the limerick, I meant.

Please do. . .

=====